

The Porter family has been putting quality potatoes on tables nationwide for three generations.

(And they're still going strong today.)

Growing up, Matt Porter's parents and grandparents always reminded him that their family-owned potato farm in Washburn played a role in feeding the world. Today, the Porter's family-run 500-acre farm is on the cutting edge of innovation as it cultivates potatoes for the processing, table, and seed markets nationwide. From one family's fields in The County to kitchen tables across the country: Call it Family Values — shared with humility, ingenuity, and pride. Look for Maine potatoes in your grocer's produce section and enjoy the fruits of these family values at your table.

Humble spuds. Huge impact.
